MILITARY BALL A GRAND SUCCESS

at the naval station, who has had wide experience in such work, and the results were magnificent. Much of the decorative material was loaned by the commandant. The bandstand was elevated at the west end of the hall in the center, being suspended from the steel girder and braced from below. Under this was the governor's box, done in green, with the bandstand on which were palms, the entrance being arched.
About the sides and end, in diamond shape, were strips of blue and white bunting, between which were shields and flags caught up at the bottom, giving an anchor effect. Along the sides flags were arranged with curtain effect, being caught back to the wall at each girder. The boxes were all in white with ropes of green in front, done by Henry Gebraeth. Up in the riders and under the roof hundreds of flags of all sizes were attractively arranged with the anchor effect, while under each girder, caught up at intervals, were daisies and red strips of bunting.
The gallery was likewise trimmed with bunting and flags.
Brilliant Lighting Scheme.
In the center of the hall hung from the girders facing downward, as a huge seven-foot star in which were seventy electric lights of three colors, red, white and blue, branching out from this and running to the sides where were ropes of laurel and electric lights containing over 300 incandescent lights. The arch of the governor's box was studded with incandescent lights, and a string ran across the back of the bandstand. Across the front of the bandstand in red lights were the words "The Military Ball." The lights were all thrown on as the governor entered.
